A Theme, not a Tool: Fully Integrating Technology into a Risk-Based Approach

Traditional risk identification and assessment, which often use manual processes and historical data, may not give a holistic view of potential threats. However, when technologies such as AI and machine learning are fully integrated into a risk-based approach, the equation changes. The newest technologies can examine immense quantities of data in real time and recognize patterns that might indicate emerging risks. This session will place a special focus on sanctions risks associated with real-time payments while also examining applications in other areas such as KYC processes and transaction monitoring.

Countering Sanctions Evasion and Terrorism Financing in the Baltics

The Baltics' location makes sanctions evasion a top concern for financial institutions. This session will look at the latest developments in Russia sanctions, including the potential for divergence between the U.S. and EU approach. The panel will also discuss the latest typologies used by Russia and Belarus to evade financial and trade restrictions; the use of novel financial platforms for both sanctions evasion and terror financing; and changes in the region, including Latvia's consolidation of sanctions enforcement efforts under its financial intelligence unit.

Update Required: Sharpening Skills and Building Teams for Evolving Challenges

As the world of AML and AFC continues to be transformed at a dizzying pace, so has the role of the compliance professional. Whereas the AFC professional's role used to be a specialized, stand-alone position, it is becoming more fully integrated within many institutions, requiring different proficiencies than just a few years ago. In addition, the skills required to deal with both emerging threats and advancing technologies have changed. As a result, managers are discovering that they, too, may need to develop new talents in order to lead these next-generation AFC teams.

You will learn how to:

- Identify and address skills gaps for existing compliance jobs as threats and technologies evolve
- Attract, train and lead staff with analytical and technical backgrounds
- Assess the need for change management and project management skills across roles
- Become a better AFC professional and a more holistic partner for your business peers
